

Franc Pšenica, 1914, a drawing of Murova. Mainly simple houses, with pastures above and fields below them.

The theme trail runs through the oldest part of Jesenice, called Murova. This part is also known as “Altassling” or “Old Jesenice”. After the Plavž, Sava and Old Jesenice settlements merged, the town of Jesenice was formed in 1929. The trail will take you through the past and the present, and teach you about the history, customs and habits of the Old Jesenice Settlement.

Andrej Čufer, mayor of Jesenice between 1924 and 1931, bought the simple farm house and transformed it into a larger mansion with a turret. The house is still named after him.

Marjan Židaneč, a drawing of Višnar Trough. Water springs above Murova were directed into troughs. Water was used for drinking, watering cattle and for laundry. At the Grmon house Drago and Pavla Višnar started a business carving wood souvenirs that was well-known in many countries.

“On the slope” was the centre of the settlement. Children played by the trough, and people gathered, sang and danced in the houses nearby. Ice hockey was played in the winter and table tennis in the summer.

The Markeš house has a preserved Late Baroque portal made of green tuff and a Late Gothic stone basement portal. Jože Markeš was an electro technician and an innovator who brought light bulbs to people’s homes and constructed a solar panel.

Two preserved cottage houses with a ground floor made of bricks, wooden frame and a “gank” (a covered balcony). The first Jesenice school (Janežek’s school) was located at Murova 18 in 1825.

Ciril Praček lived in the building next door. Among several great results, he took 15th place in the Nordic combined at the 1936 Winter Olympics at Garmisch-Partenkirchen

Only the Višnar and the Škafar Troughs are still preserved today. “Pr’ Škafar” is where they once made pails. A house name of this kind tells us something about the owner or the house itself, thus keeping the memories of Old Jesenice Settlement alive.
